About The Survey

- Since 1999, the Transamerica Center for Retirement Studies[®] has conducted a national survey of U.S. business employers and workers regarding their attitudes toward retirement. The overall goals for the study are to illuminate emerging trends, promote awareness, and help educate the public.
- Harris Interactive was commissioned to conduct the Twelfth Annual Retirement Survey for Transamerica Center for Retirement Studies[®]. Transamerica Center for Retirement Studies[®] is not affiliated with Harris Interactive.

Methodology

- A telephone survey was conducted among a nationally representative sample of 743 employers. Potential respondents were targeted based on job title at for-profit companies and met the following criteria:
 - Business executives who make decisions about employee benefits at his or her company
 - Employ 10 employees or more across all locations
- 17-minute telephone interviews were conducted between January 28, 2011 and February 25, 2011.
- Quotas were set for large and small companies and results were weighted as needed on employee size using weighting targets from the Dun & Bradstreet database to ensure each quota group had a representative sample based on the number of companies in each employee size range. A full methodology is available.
- Percentages were rounded to the nearest whole percent. Differences in the sums of combined categories/answers are due to rounding.
- Significance was tested at 95% confidence and has been indicated throughout the report in the following ways:
 - Significance between sub-groups is identified by the letters A, B, C, D, etc. next to the significantly higher number for that corresponding sub-group.
 - Significance between 11th Annual (2009/10 data) and 12th Annual surveys (2011 data) has been indicated as follows:

— = 12th annual result is significantly higher than the result from the 11th annual survey

= 12th annual result is significantly lower than the result from the 11th annual survey

• The base size was 299 for large companies and 444 for small companies. Other reduced bases have been noted throughout the report.

Terminology

This report uses the following terminology:

- Small company: 10 to 499 employees
- Large company: 500 or more employees

The 12th Annual Transamerica Retirement survey found that employers in the U.S. are beginning to show renewed signs of confidence in both the economy and their companies' financial outlook. Fewer employers reported downsizing and layoffs in the last year – and more reported positive signs of growth including hiring additional employees. These positive indicators also translated into an increase in employers enhancing their retirement benefits as well as reinstating benefits (e.g., 401(k) matching contributions) that had been suspended since the recession began.

Importance and Offering of Employee Benefits

- Most employers (85 percent) believe that 401(k) or similar retirement plans are important for attracting and retaining employees.
- The majority of employers continue to believe their employees view health insurance (99 percent) and 401(k)s or other employee self-funded plans (85 percent) as important benefits.
- 78 percent of employers offer a 401(k) or similar plan. Plan sponsorship rates are higher for large companies (94 percent) than small companies (76 percent).
- Of those employers who do not offer a 401(k) or similar plan:
 - The most frequently cited reason was "encountering difficult business conditions" (47 percent).
 - Only 20 percent indicated that they are likely to offer a plan in the next two years; however, 33 percent said they would be likely to consider joining a multiple employer plan that is offered by "a reputable vendor who handles many of the fiduciary and administrative duties at a reasonable cost."
- Employers believe their employees view company-funded defined benefit plans as important (65 percent); however, only 20 percent of employers offer one.

- The percentage of employers offering matching contributions is consistent with the previous year's survey. The survey found an encouraging sign in that half (51 percent) of companies that recently decreased or suspended the match plan to reinstate it within the next two years.
- For those companies that offer a 401(k) plan, only about a quarter (22 percent) automatically enroll new employees in the plan. Large companies are much more likely (46 percent) to automatically enroll new employees than small companies (19 percent). For those that do not have automatic enrollment, high participation rate and employee choice are both cited as reasons not to auto enroll in the future.
- Most employers (84 percent) report their default investment option satisfies their QDIA requirement.
- Enhanced offerings like Roth 401(k)s saw a significant increase to 31 percent in adoption compared to last year (24 percent). However, this adoption rate may be close to saturation as only 4 percent of companies that don't offer it plan to do so in the future. Many employers cite lack of interest (33 percent) as the number one reason for not adopting.
- Only two-thirds (65 percent) of companies that provide an employee-funded retirement plan also offer investment guidance or advice to their employees. Of the third that don't offer advice, 10 percent plan to in the future. Of those with no plans to offer, many cite potential liability (42 percent) as the reason.

Perceptions and Management of Current Retirement Plan Offerings

- Since the recession began, relatively few employers (15 percent) indicated they or their retirement plan provider have done anything to help their employees get back on track with their retirement savings. Large companies were more likely to have done so (34 percent) than small companies (13 percent).
- The majority of companies offering 401(k) or similar plans offer education and/or advice about the retirement savings plan.
 - Typically they offer: on-line tools and resources (78 percent), printed brochures and flyers (63 percent), one-on-one counseling (62 percent), group meetings (60 percent) and informative emails (46 percent).
 - In most cases, large companies were more likely to offer these resources than small companies.
- The majority of employers who offer a 401(k) or similar plan help employees transition to retirement in some way.
 - Employers most often: provide information about distribution options (77 percent), allow terminated participants to leave their balances in the plan (76 percent), distribute retirement planning materials (56 percent), and allow systematic withdrawals by participants (51 percent).
 - A minority of employers offer: financial counseling (43 percent), an income annuity as a payout option in the retirement plan (21 percent), or pre-retirement seminars (19 percent).
 - Large companies are more likely to offer assistance than small ones.
- Of those employers who do not offer a 401(k) or similar plan, three out of four (78 percent) said they do "nothing" to help their employees transition to retirement.

- Almost all (95 percent) employers believe their employees are satisfied with the retirement plan offered and the quality of the investment options within the retirement plan (96 percent).
 - Among employers who offer self-funded plans, the majority (70 percent) feel their employees have enough investment options in their retirement plan.
 - Two-thirds (67 percent) of employers who offer self-funded plans feel their employees do not need to receive any more information from the plan provider about fees and expenses.
- Additionally, most employers (78 percent) made no changes to the 401(k) in the previous year, nor do they plan to make changes in the coming year (84 percent).
 - Significantly less employers made a change to their 401(k) plan in 2011 compared to 2009/10.
 - More small companies that made changes to their plans added a managed account this year and increased the match.
- Overall, only about one in ten companies (9 percent) who offer a 401(k) or other self-funded plan are considering changing the plan in the next year.
 - However, large companies (19 percent) are more likely than small companies (8 percent) to consider making changes in the next twelve months.
- Most companies (65 percent) are aware of the Department of Labor's new fee disclosure regulations and of those companies that are aware, over half (55 percent) say they will reevaluate their retirement plan's fees and expenses when the regulations go into effect.

- Similar to previous years, about two-thirds (65 percent) of employers offering a self-funded plan use an outside advisor, but since 2006, the level of employers using one has slowly declined from 74 percent.
 - Financial planners/brokers are the most frequently used type of financial advisor.
 - There is no clear consensus on who should be held accountable for selecting and monitoring plan fees and plan options, but the plan provider/administrator and plan sponsor are the two most popular options for each responsibility respectively.

Perceptions of Employee Involvement with Retirement Planning

- Over the last three years, there has been a gradual decline in employers that believe employees could work until age 65 and still not save enough to meet their retirement needs, from a high of 80 percent in 2008/09 to 70 percent in 2011.
- Many employers (82 percent) feel their employees do not know as much as they should about retirement investing, but surprisingly most (68 percent) believe their employees will still be able to achieve a comfortable lifestyle in retirement.
 - Large companies remained more critical of their employees with nine in ten (88 percent) believing their employees don't know as much as they should about retirement investing compared with 81 percent of employers at smaller companies believing the same.
- About three-quarters (76 percent) of employers agree that most of their employees would prefer to rely on outside experts to monitor and manage their retirement savings and a similar amount of employers (70 percent) feel most employees prefer not to concern themselves with retirement investing until they get closer to their retirement date.
 - This attitude is reflected by many employers (51 percent) believing most employees would not like to receive more information and advice from the company on how to reach one's retirement goals.
 - Employers at small companies are more likely to believe most of their employees would not like any more information on retirement (53 percent) compare to only 36 percent of large companies that say the same thing.

- Over three-quarters (78 percent) of employers are likely to believe their employees have a clear understanding of the fees associated with participating in the retirement plan.
 - Almost a third of small companies (31 percent) strongly agree their employees have a clear understanding of retirement fees, a significant increase over last year's sentiment (19 percent) and a feeling that is shared by more small companies than large companies (19 percent).
- Similar to perceptions reported in 2007-2009, more employers (54 percent) believe their employees want a break-down of fees for services and investments.
 - The popularity of a high level break-down was only significantly more popular this year among large companies. It was more likely that small companies believe their employees have no preference for how they receive fee information.

BASE: NOT LIKELY TO OFFER 401(k) IN NEXT 2 YEARS

Q610. Why is your company not likely to offer a plan in the next two years? CHOOSE ALL THAT APPLY.

Likelihood of Considering a Multiple Employer Plan

• Of those small companies that do not offer a 401(k) or similar plan, one-third (34 percent) would be likely to consider joining a multiple employer plan.

Base: Does Not Offer 401(k) Nor Other Self Funded Plan Total '11 (N=)98); Small Companies: '11 (N=80); Large Companies: '11 (N=18*)

NEW QUESTION IN WAVE 12 Q1605. As an alternative to establishing a stand-alone 401(k) plan, if your company had the ability to join a multiple employer plan which is offered by a reputable vendor who handles many of the fiduciary and administrative duties and at a reasonable cost, how likely would you be to consider it?

Matching Contributions

 The proportion of employers offering a matching contribution is similar to last year. This may signal a stabilization or bottoming out of the number of companies that do not offer a matching contribution.

BASE: OFFERS 401(k) PLAN OR OTHER SELF-FUNDED PLAN

Q640. Does your company offer a matching contribution as part of its 401(k) or other company-sponsored retirement plan?
